Country Programme Outline for Papua New Guinea (2003-2007)

Contents

Part I: Situation Analysis

1.   Papua New Guinea achieved political independence in 1975. As a young nation, the country is at a crossroads. Despite possessing substantial natural resources and receiving significant external support over the last twenty-seven years, there remains major development challenges in the country. In 2002, a large percentage of the population continue to face serious health problems and lack of access to basic education and other services. Key economic and social indicators point to a decline in the living standards of many people, with vulnerable groups like children, youth, women and disadvantaged populations being most affected. The image of Papua New Guinea as a nation, beset with chronic law and order problems, a record of poor governance and stagnating development, with increasing levels of poverty, has isolated the country from the mainstream of regional and international trade, commerce and investment. The main development challenges facing Papua New Guinea today are to reverse this trend, by improving the national and provincial governance system and improve human security, reduce poverty and promote sustainable human development and environmental conservation.

2.   The UNDP Country Office is also at its own crossroads, with far reaching changes taking place within the office in an effort to improve accountability and shift to a more results oriented programming mode. Against this background, UNDP cooperation with Papua New Guinea for the period 2003-2007 is set on a new course, where sustainable human development with focus on good governance using locally "best practices" and 'reality-tested' ideas and methodologies will be the base.

3.   The Government is at the present time working with an alliance of partners, including the Asian Development Bank, UNDP, AusAID, World Bank and others to develop a National Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper that will focus more on the 'poverty of opportunity'. This is a definition often used in the Pacific islands to describe a situation, where people may have enough to eat through communal access to land and resources, but have only very limited access to basic health and education services, with few opportunities for employment or income generation.

4.   The lack of opportunities in a changing economic and social environment has contributed to the emergence of a number of interrelated development issues including a serious increase in crime and instability in local communities; unsustainable use of natural resources and inadequate management of environmental conservation. The effects of 'poverty of access and opportunity' has had a particular negative effect on gender equality in many aspects of life in Papua New Guinea, including an alarming high rate of violence against women, although this varies between provinces and amongst different ethnic groups in the country. The strong nexus between poor governance, poverty, law and order problems and the growing HIV/AIDS epidemic has been well documented and has had a negative impact on the daily lives of all people and effected long-term investment decisions. Also, it has led to the highest incidence of HIV/AIDS in the Pacific region, with the highest percentage of 15-24 year-olds living with HIV/AIDS in South-east Asia and the Pacific.

5.   The Government has recognized the urgent needs to undertake governance reforms in the following areas to combat poverty and increase development opportunities for its people through: (i) rationalization of the roles of the private and public sectors; (ii) strengthened national leadership through the institutions of parliament and government; (iii) increased and enhanced opportunities for government/civil society partnership; and (iv) improvement of social service access and delivery.

Part II: Past cooperation and lessons learned

6.   The review of the Country Cooperation Framework (1997-2002) conducted in 2001, noted some positive results in the areas of: (a) governance – development of decentralized planning systems and the publication of the first National Human Development Report in 1998. The theme of the report was 'rural livelihoods' and was designed to enhance the policy making and planning processes at national, provincial, district and local levels; (b) sustainable livelihoods – support for business training and initiatives in the informal sector and support to a safer city initiative in Port Moresby; (c) reconstruction and rehabilitation of Bougainville – has been a key success in mobilizing donor funding and cocoa and copra rehabilitation; and (d) environment and natural resources management – by introducing instruments for community-based integrated conservation and development schemes.

7.　　　　The key lessons learned are: (i) importance of programme focus with emphasis on results; (ii) integration of governance and human security to ensure that emphasis remains on government-community interaction and promotes a more systematic dialogue on poverty reduction monitoring and financial management issues; and (iii) greater focus on implementation and institutionalisation of actions and processes, with verifiable outcomes.

8.　　　　Other lessons are related to: (i) the need for capacity building and the requirement for actual, not assumed, 'ownership' locally; (ii) the potential for strengthening the nexus between governance, poverty and natural resource/environment conservation (iii) the importance of emphasizing gender mainstreaming particularly in the area of local governance and local planning processes, and difficulties in promoting quality health and education service and for addressing major concern of HIV/AIDS.

Part III: Proposed Programme

9.　　　　In the context of the stated development objectives of Papua New Guinea, the lessons learned from the first CCF period, as well as those of the broader UN programme as set down in the Country Strategy Note (1997-2001), it is proposed that UNDP focus its future support on building capacity and human development and in strengthening sustainable development. Set against the three objectives of the UNDAF of (i) enhanced leadership and participation; (ii) improved access quality and delivery of basic services; and (iii) improved internal, regional and global integration, the proposed programme aims to achieve this focus through implementation of activities that centre around the promotion of good governance and poverty reduction.

10.　　　　Capacity building and human resource development will strengthen accountability mechanisms and institutions, with specific attention given to constitutional compliance bodies, Parliament to promote the equitable allocation of resources from national government to provinces and districts in accordance with the Organic Law. Specific attention will be given to the development of gender sensitivity tools for poverty reduction planning and in addressing law and order issues. Attention will be given to an expanded advocacy role for political and community leaders and constitutional bodies in the areas of human rights, gender mainstreaming and the socio-economic impact of HIV/AIDS as well as key lessons learned from crisis prevention and management of support provided to Bougainville under CCF I. Support for the preparation of nationally led Millennium Development Goals monitoring and reporting and a second Human Development Report for Papua New Guinea will be key advocacy tools.

11.　　　　Sustainable development will be encouraged through the pilot conservation project in Milne Bay and the continuation of support to the development programme in Bougainville that will include opportunities for strengthening agro-based industries and identifying opportunities for introducing successful Bougainville activities elsewhere in Papua New Guinea. A review of the legislative constraints to informal sector activity will be an important element of the promotion of sustainable development.

12.　　　　The cross-fertilisation of ideas and overlapping issues and partners sharing the same goal is recognised, and NGOs, private sector and external development partners alongside government partners will be engaged, as appropriate. Increased participation within the country as well with the international community will be facilitated through enhanced use of ICT and increased community participation in activities focussed on human rights and law and order issues. The Pacific sub-regional programmes under the Regional Cooperation

Framework (2002-2007) in the areas of governance, human rights, sustainable livelihoods and ICT strategic planning provide opportunities for synergies between country level initiatives and regional programmes.

13.   UNDP will very assertively strengthen its cooperation and working relationship with the government and its traditional development partners as well as with emerging new partners, both indigenous and exogenous. UNDP will play a catalytic role in promoting a holistic, multisectoral approach to policy development. As an 'honest broker' UNDP will offer support to the Government as it seeks to make development decisions based on the broad range of technical assistance offered by the development community. It will use its global network to offer to the Government state of the art experience and information as well as access to south-south cooperation to broaden understanding of policy options. In designing such support, UNDP will be cognizant of the need to respect the specific development context and the potential to draw on past and emergent experience from within Papua New Guinea.

14.   Interventions will seek to intensify all aspects of delivery, with the focus on government ownership, coordination with other stakeholders, management, implementation, monitoring and mitigation of risks. It will uphold the principle of human development in the development process, while reinforcing locally developed and reality-tested mechanisms and tools for management and monitoring of performance for impact. Commitments to global agreements and conventions, especially to the Millennium Development Goals (MDG) will be integrated with sectoral priorities and indicators of performance.   The emphasis will be on integration with the Government's own development and budget monitoring and reporting requirements, minimizing the need for a parallel reporting process. Harmonization of the resident UN agency programme cycles increases opportunities for common UN/UNDP programme/project design, management, monitoring and evaluation. It also expands opportunities for joint and/or parallel programming, both with other UN agencies as well as with traditional major bilateral and NGO development partners and the private sector.

15.   The country programme will ensure access to outposted policy advisory services within the Sub-Regional Resource Facility. In the design of specific programme interventions, particular attention will be given to maximizing potential synergies between the country programmes on the one hand and regional and global programmes on the other. In particular, it is envisaged that improved integration between the country programme and the Pacific sub-regional programme will be emphasized and strengthened in the forthcoming programming cycle.

16.   The intended outcomes to be achieved during the CCF II period are shown in Annex: Results and Resource Framework

Part VI: Management, monitoring and evaluation

Monitoring and evaluation

17.   Through the application of results-based management (RBM) principles, outcome indicators, including baselines and targets, have been agreed with the Government and other key stakeholders (see Annex 1). In order to ensure that the UNDP team and Government counterparts are familiar with all aspects of the application of these principles a training programme will be organized in mid-2002.

18.   The UNDP Country Office will work closely with selected implementation partners to ensure that programme and project monitoring systems are in place and aligned with the results-based framework.   The existence of verifiable outcomes and clear targets are expected to make monitoring and evaluation more effective and results focused, ensuring that Country Office staff, in concert with the Government and development partners, internalise the systematic management of the UNDP cooperation activities. In addition, every effort will be made to align these programme and project monitoring systems with those that are already in place by the Government's annual budget and financial management and reporting system.

Execution and implementation

19.   As noted in the Country Review (2001) of the current CCF, UN agencies were primarily involved in project execution, with only one project nationally executed (NEX). It is envisaged that the government would request UNDP to pursue NEX as the preferred modality in future. It will be necessary that the increased use of the NEX modality be underpinned through systematic capacity building for sustainability. This will require a concerted effort, building upon a new generation of re-profiled country team members.

Resource mobilization

20.   Implementation of an innovative resource mobilization strategy will be a vital ingredient for the successful implementation of the proposed programme areas in the new CPO. The key principles which will be applied in developing the strategy will be: (i) a sharp focus in the areas of UNDP engagement based on its comparative advantage and ability to play a catalytic role in policy development; (ii) a clear demonstration that UNDP involvement will bring innovation, add value, be cost-effective and offer a new or alternative perspective from other sources (iii) coordinated and sustained involvement of donors in development of programme initiatives, where UNDP can clearly identify and articulate its role and commitment; (iv) a concerted shift, whenever possible, to joint missions/design, monitoring and reporting processes that minimize the burdens placed on the Government; (v) greater NGO and CSO involvement; and (vi) intensified efforts to capitalize on the opportunities for non-core funding from UNDP Trust Funds, regional and global programmes and other sources yet to be tapped for the UNDP country programme.

Country office structure and staffing

21.   The proposed programme will be managed under a re-profiled Country Office. The Country Office places utmost importance in enhancing capacity within the office and, in this regard, a comprehensive training plan has been developed and is being implemented. Training will be essential to ensure staff job satisfaction and career development, manage an orderly transition from the current to new programme cycle, and allow for the full and effective delivery of the programme proposed for the period 2003-2007.

22.   Vital to the viability of the Country Office programme is the mobilization of extra-budgetary resources (cash or in-kind) to complement a limited number of core positions with technical and programme management expertise in the thematic priority areas outlined in the Country Programme. This will ensure that the Office can honour the commitments made to donor partners as part of its resource mobilization strategy.

Contingency Planning

23.   A key issue faced in the implementation of the first Country Cooperation Framework (1997-2001) was the unforeseen disruptions to development efforts in Papua New Guinea due to a series of natural disaster emergencies, as well as a number of major events that led to political instability and security concerns. Against this background, the UNDP Country Office will work with the rest of the UNCT, the Government and civil society to develop capacity for contingency planning that will further supplement the country programme deliverables, should such events occur in the future, while retaining the three pillars of the programme of governance, service delivery and integration.
